CAMPUS CENTERS

PRINCETON UNIVERSITY

Princeton's student-oriented centers and programs are a vibrant and important focus of campus life. They are great places to make friends, give and receive advice, take on new social and intellectual challenges and, sometimes, to simply relax.

Fields Center
Carl A. Fields Center for Equality + Cultural Understanding

The Carl A. Fields Center for Equality and Cultural Understanding strives to empower members of the University community as they seek to learn about self, understand the breadth of cultural and social differences among us, and build the skills needed to create and lead a more just world.

CENTER FOR AFRICAN AMERICAN STUDIES

Launched in the fall of 2006, the Center for African American Studies allows students to draw on the insights and techniques of various disciplines in an effort to understand the experiences, history and culture of African-descended people. The center offers a variety of courses, lectures and research opportunities to more fully enrich the intellectual lives of students, faculty and members of the larger community.

CJL

The Center for Jewish Life/Hillel believes in creating a community where all students, faculty, staff and even the larger community can come together to take part in the rich tapestry of Jewish Life at Princeton. The CJL is committed to creating a community that is welcoming of all people; Jews and non-Jews, religious and secular, men and women.

Office of Religious Life

The Office of Religious Life promotes Princeton University's care and support for the many religious communities that flourish on its campus and strongly encourages interfaith dialogue and cooperation. The office seeks, through its own programs and in collaboration with others, to provide opportunities for community service, cross-cultural understanding, and constructive social action.
